To whom it may concern,

I have followed this subject with interest from the beginning. Except for Judge Jackson's public statements which were less than jurist prudent his findings are consistent with the evidence presented.

Is there no Anti-Trust law enforcement anymore? Heck even a second Federal Judge has struck down part of the settlement agreement which would require Microsoft to "supply" (read low cost advertising) computers to Public schools.

Just remember that while you have to take the political heat now. You will also have to live in the Society that is saddled with the outcome of this case. Chose carefully, choose wisely.

Microsoft has clearly conducted business in a predatory fashion and should be required to pay the price.

The price we all will pay is only higher the longer justice is delayed.
